

FINAL ASSIGNMENT

We have also set aside a considerable amount of time on most days of the week for you to work on the development of your Twain-related lesson plan, which can range in scope from a 45-minute class activity to a multi-day unit of study depending on your particular classroom needs and interests. This plan will be completed by the end of the workshop, unless other arrangements are made at the discretion of the Director. While the topic of our workshop traditionally suggests lessons for English and/or History classes, you are also strongly encouraged to consider and develop a lesson for classes in other disciplines and for students of varied ages and/or abilities. Steve Armstrong, our master teacher, will work with you to frame your lesson according to a simple design rubric. Your final work will be recorded electronically so that it can eventually be put on our museum website so that your peers from across the country can benefit from your workshop experience.
